Parents Evening

We were delighted by the excellent attendance at our parents evenings this week. Whilst we are aware that with the busy lives we all experience today, it is sometimes difficult to attend school events, it was so impressive that almost every parent attended to support their child

Parents' evenings are important occasions at which we share information on children's progress and go over essential 'next steps' in learning. We also discuss behaviour, attendance, medical/personal issues and any special education needs issues children have. Most importantly we agree ways in which we can work together and parents can support children at home. We always try to be really positive about all the fantastic progress children have made, but also not vague about areas where improvement is required.

The impact of a parents evening is very apparent. We notice many children have a renewed enthusiasm for school, particularly in areas where we have highlighted that they are brilliant! We also see children raising their game in areas where they need to do better.

The impact of 'parental interest' on children's progress is seriously underestimated. Children who make the best progress not only have great teachers, but often have parents who support homework, hear their child read and just simply show an interest in what children do at school that day. Our tip is however not to say 'what did you do at school today?', instead ask imaginative questions of children such as 'tell me 5 ways you used numbers' or 'what did the main character do in the story today', or 'what was your best/longest/most improved piece of writing today?'

If your children normally answer the question 'what did you do at school today?' with the reply 'nothing', it is like squeezing blood out of a stone finding out what they got up to. Achieving an answer which includes more detail is very much worth the extra effort!

Children extending their learning at home

Over the past few weeks I have had the privilege of being shown learning that many children have completed at home.

This is work completed in addition to the regular set homework. I have recently seen a model of a WW1 tank and aircraft linked to Badger's theme.

Children have shown great enthusiasm and pride in stories they have written at home, information booklets about their current theme or handwriting and times table practise.

Learning at home is very important and it is amazing that our children are doing extra learning inspired by their work in school. Keep up the hard work Wood End Primary School, you are always making me proud.
